Saint Louis University Compliance Help Line
(877)525-KNOW (5669)

Q. I have some concerns regarding business, billing and ethical practices in my department. What resources are available?

Saint Louis University has high standards in conduct which encompass knowledge, skills, attitudes and actions. These standards are articulated in the Shared Values for the Common Good (The 5C's) Competence, Commitment and Community.

The Saint Louis University Compliance Policy supports these standards and outlines the availability of a confidential, toll-free helpline (877) 525-KNOW(5669) to be used by any individual who may have questions. The Compliance Policy further outlines the specific employee responsibility of reporting any action that may put SLU at risk in their business practices. Callers may choose to use the line anonymously but in all instances without fear of retaliation. Additionally, the helpline is answered 24 hr a day and in different languages, if warranted. At the completion of the call, the individual receives a call back date when they can check the resolution of the potential issue.

Q. It seems there are frequent headlines regarding government accusations of health care providers and organizations allegedly committing fraud in business practices. What are some examples of health care fraud and abuse?

The following are examples of potential fraud in the health care arena:
- Billing for services not provided
- Upcoding, i.e. billing for a service at a higher level than is medically necessary
- Insufficient/absent documentation in the medical record to justify billed services
- Falsifying medical records, i.e. indicating falsely that a particular health care professional was physically present for a procedure/service or documenting unverified information
- Billing for high level professionals when less qualified professionals are rendering the service
- Illegal remuneration (kickbacks) i.e., providing free office space for referrals, etc.

For further information or general questions regarding potential areas of compliance risk, please contact the Compliance Department staff at 977-5545.
