Developmental Perspective on Youth Violence and Promising Community-based Interventions

May 16, 17, and 18 2016  9-4pm daily  21 CEH’s

Course Description

This course will focus on the developmental antecedents to youth involvement in violent behavior. The course will cover the influence of bio-social, environmental, and other factors in association with youth patterns of violent behavior. Contemporary and historical trends and patterns will be examined. Promising and evidence-based community interventions will be identified and assessed.

Learning Objectives

1. Identify and understand the causes and correlates of youth violent behavior.
2. Examine current and historical trends and patterns of youth violence.
3. Identify and explore community-based interventions for youth violence reduction and prevention.

Presented by
Faculty teaching in Criminology and Criminal Justice

Dr. Norman A. White
Dr. Brian Boutwell
Dr. Noelle Fearn
Dr. M. Dyan Mc Guire

The faculty have years of experience in working in the areas of juvenile justice and youth violent behavior through research and service and have published and presented in this area. In addition, the faculty are very involved in current challenges in the St. Louis community and current prevention models.
