

The meetings were productive and structured enough, but yet we had a chance to express what we wanted. We covered a wide variety of topics and it gave a great framework for gathering memories and thoughts and realizations from our semesters abroad.

I think the small circle made everyone feel equal and able to share their stories easily because it was a non-judgmental place.

I enjoy the openness of the classroom structure. The conversation is not planned but stemmed from every person's thoughts.

I liked reviewing our reflections as a class because hearing other people's thoughts and comments helped me to conjure up more thoughts and memories from my trip.
