

Statement about the Course

The purpose of this introductory course is to introduce students to the theoretical and practical fields of public administration. This course is not intended to be just another liberal arts course with only academic appeal. Public administration, as a discipline, has definite career utility and one objective I have is to show students how theoretical knowledge regarding public administration can help students prepare for careers in public or private management. The course covers such theoretical and practical subjects as: (1) the evolution of modern bureaucracy; (2) public administration as a practical and academic discipline; (3) organizational theory and behavior; (4) administrative ethics; (5) administrative law; (6) personnel administration; (7) budgeting; (8) communications theory; (9) public unionism; (10) decision-making theory; and other related subjects.

Some current Internet articles and other articles sent to you during the semester will be used in this course to supplement the textbook. These articles will provide students with “breaking news” stories on happenings in public administration that will help make PA seem more alive, current, and relevant. Certainly, President Trump provides a lot of news stories as he attempts to “deconstruct” the administrative state.

Required Readings

Rosenbloom and Kravchuk. Public Administration: Understanding Management, Politics, And Law In The Public Sector, 8th edition. (McGraw-Hill, 2014). Note: I am sorry that this text is a little dated because I like to use the most current sources, but unfortunately the new edition is scheduled to come out next year. This course is devoted mostly to having students learn basic public administration principles and practices anyway, so this textbook is fine since the basics pretty much remain the same, especially within only a four year period.

Assigned articles from the Internet and articles sent to you via your email. These articles will help bring some textbook materials up to date.

Course Objectives

Basically, I have a twofold objective in teaching this course. Firstly, I want students to learn a lot about the academic and practical field of public administration. Secondly, I want students to develop a critical understanding of PA. That means I want students to learn to think in a conceptually scholarly way about various happenings and claims in PA. More specifically, I want students to be able to think critically about what works and does not work in say, motivating public employees or public budgeting.

Modes of Assessment and Skills/Knowledge Being Assessed

Students will be assessed on their ability to learn and retain course materials, as well as on their ability to think critically about the subject matter, through a midterm and a final, a position paper, and their class participation. As the semester progresses students should improve in their ability to think critically as they learn more about the subject matter and practice their ability to critique the materials in class discussions.

In-Class Activities

In-class activities will consist of standard lectures combined with a lot of class discussions on issues pertaining to public administration. Students will be expected to keep up with the reading assignments, especially the assigned current articles from the Internet and other articles so that they can participate meaningfully in class discussions. Participation will constitute 10% of a student's final grade in this course.
