Addressing Target Points

Explanation of the Requirement for Renewing Accommodations
Students asked questions about CADR's practice of renewing academic accommodations each year.

CADR requires a renewal process for academic accommodations to:

• Understand and plan for the need of specific services related to accommodations, such as ASL interpreting, CART captioning and services, and required lab assistants needed for student labs. These specific services take time to budget for, organize, and set in place before the academic year begins. When CADR has advanced notice of students renewing their accommodations with these specific services, the staff are then able to begin working on these needs ahead of time to ensure accommodations are met.

• Collect data through registration numbers. With this renewal process, CADR is able to collect important data for registration numbers. Registration numbers gives CADR a myriad of important information, such as
  • Trends in accommodation needs/requests at SLU
  • Tracking of student percentage registered with CADR in relation to the overall SLU student population
  • Increases/decreases in needs for specific, external services
  • Supporting evidence for increased budgetary needs, such as staffing, assistive technology, etc.
  • Ratios of CADR staff to registered students

• Understand the "end time" of students with accommodations. Some students register with CADR on a temporary basis for a temporary injury. Temporary registration has an expiration of when the accommodations are approved. Typically, temporarily registered students do not continue their accommodations. The renewal process informs CADR of what temporary accommodations are ending and the impact it has on registration numbers, as well as budget considerations.

Providing a List of Available Academic Accommodations
Students requested that CADR provide a list of available academic accommodations.
CADR staff work to promote skill building when it comes to students' self-advocating for their needs. Within most higher education institutions, it is common practice for offices/departments that work with accommodated students to require that those students be the individuals who initiate requests and self-advocate for their needs. In addition, CADR believes that students should be able to articulate their experiences with their diagnosis or disability and the related impact on their academic skills. Thus, some accommodations may not be appropriate and may not be necessary for a student access. CADR will continue to have conversations with students about academic accommodations and make appropriate recommendations and decisions for implementing these academic accommodations. However, a list of available academic accommodations will not be provided.

Sensory Room Exposure

Some students said that they were unaware that a sensory room existed or that better marketing about the sensory room should be considered.

CADR's Instagram account (slu_cadr) has created several posts surrounding the sensory room. In addition, information about the sensory room is posted on CADR's Student Resources webpage. Further, during intake appointments, CADR staff will share information about the sensory room if it is applicable to the student's needs and experience. Despite these strategies, CADR will explore more marketing ideas for the sensory room, such as providing a video of the sensory room layout.

Out of Class Testing (OCT) Form Deadline Flexibility

Several students voiced requests for adjusting the one week deadline for OCT forms for the testing center.

CADR requires the one week deadline for OCT forms to ensure that

- the testing center has staff available at that the requested exam time
- the testing center has the space available to accommodate the request
- the testing center is able to meet exam accommodation needs (private room availability, request for a reader or scribe, etc.)
- instructors have ample time to prepare exam materials and submit them to the testing center in time

For these reasons, it is unreasonable to decrease the deadline requirement for OCT forms.
this time, the OCT form submission deadline will not be changed.
Thank you to those students who participated in our feedback survey.
