

INFORMATION ABOUT PCR AND SEROLOGY TESTS

The COVID-19 laboratory tests are:

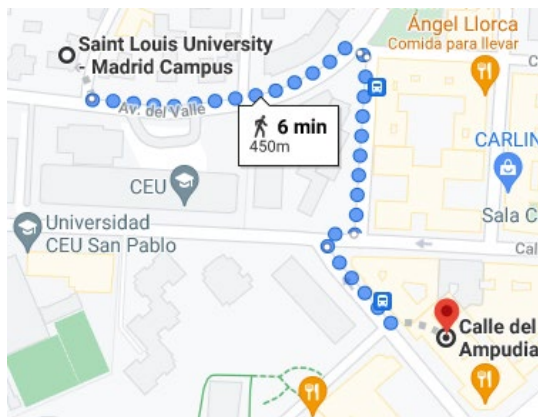

- PCR: a nasal and pharyngeal sampling with a swab to measure virus RNA levels in the patient; this is the fastest and most reliable test to detect infection.
- Serology quantified in serum IgM and IgG: a blood test that measures the amount of IgM and IgG anti-Covid antibodies in the patient allowing a diagnosis of the patient's probability of having been infected.
- Antigens test: are immunoassays that are frequently used to rapidly diagnose infectious diseases. They detect the presence of proteins from a specific infectious agent. In the case of SARS-CoV-2, the test is able to detect the surface proteins of the virus (S-proteins).

See the Sanitas coverage form regarding Covid-19 analytics, with effect date 03/15/2021.
